The Fourth Session of the 12th National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference came to an end today. Looking back at the two-week-meeting, how did China's top advisory body view the future development of the country?

And as China enters an economic and social transition period, how should it deal with attendant social conflicts? To answer these questions and more, we're joined in the studio by Prof. Jia Qingguo from Peking University. But before we get started, let's take a look at this.
