

《2015年度最佳钞票出炉：看看全球最美的钱长啥样？》

New Zealand's five-dollar note has been named the banknote of the year for 2015, a "clear winner" among nearly 40 eligible designs from a record 20 countries.

The honour is awarded every year by the International Bank Note Society. To be eligible, a banknote must have been issued for the first time during the year of the award, and be in general circulation. It is assessed for its "artistic merit and/or innovative security features", including use of colour, contrast and balance. Almost 150 new banknotes were released last year, with "over three dozen" of sufficiently new design to be eligible for nomination.

The Reserve Bank of New Zealand released the new $5 and $10 notes in October as part of its Brighter Money range. The $5 shows mountaineer Sir Edmund Hillary facing the South Island's Aoraki/Mount Cook, and, on the other side, a rare yellow-eyed penguin and local flora. The society praised the "stunning orange and brown" design and its "gorgeous polymer window".

Announcing the decision, the society said New Zealand's $5 polymer note was a "clear winner", but Scotland's Clydesdale Bank five-pound note, Sweden's 20 kronor note, Russia's 100 rouble note, and Kazakhstan's 20,000 tenge note were named as runners-up. Four continents, four Middle East countries and four island nations were among the nominees.
