Survivors were sent to a specially set up facility in a sports hall to receive help. They recalled the moment of the explosion.

"The first few seconds you don't understand at all what's going on then some people started running. We ran over the suitcases, everything was left behind," one survivor said.

"I saw that someone in front of me dropped some money and wanted to turn around to pick it up but then kept running and then we heard the announcement saying 'you must all get out of here!'"

"It has been extremely emotional. It is difficult to explain, but it is extremely emotional because, first of all, it is incredibly stressful because you realise that if you had been there just ten minutes earlier you would have possibly been one of those injured or even one of those killed," another survivor said.
