

《新郎穿女士内衣被绑游街 市民疑绑架报警》

Editor's Note: Are you up on what the hundreds of millions of Chinese netizens are talking about? Take a moment and get the rundown of what's hot, what's trending, and what's drawing the most buzz on the Chinese blogosphere.

??

A man sparked fears of kidnapping in Chongqing after he was spotted being paraded with bound hands and wearing only women's underwear.

??

It turns out he was just the victim of his own wedding.

????????????????

Chongqing police who responded to calls of a possible kidnapping said the incident was actually the hazing of a groom-to-be before his marriage ceremony by friends.

????????“????”????????????????????

Witnesses reported seeing the lucky groom, surnamed Yang, walking along a Chong-qing street around 9:15 pm with his hands tied behind his back as a man led him by a rope.

????????9?15????????????????????????????????

Police arrived to find that not only was Yang wearing negligee, but also that two cars carrying friends were following the parade, The Chongqing Morning Post reported.

??

Officers took the group into custody on possible obstruction of traffic charges.

????????????????????

Surveillance video shows cars swerving around the slow march of shame for 20 minutes that intended to embarrass Yang.

????????????????20????????????????

Police established the men were hazing Yang as per local custom and they were released.

????????????????????

The story rang up debate on social media about such regional traditions, many of which involve subjecting newlyweds to awkward and embarrassing trials on the eve of their wedding day.

????????????????????

Net user "Hu Yidao" called them "corrupt customs that should have long been abandoned."

??“??”????“?”????