The British angler lured the monster with a bait of bread and rice before the gruelling battle at a lake in Ban Pong, Thailand.

His catch weighed 222lb, nearly 16 stone, beating the Siamese carp record by more than 70lb.

Mr Webb owns a fishery nearby and bought the carp from the lake owner for his own waters, paying a sum thought to be several thousand pounds.

The fisherman, 57, originally from Crawley, West Sussex, said: 'As soon as I felt it on the end of my line I knew I had something special. I was elated but shattered afterwards.'

He was so fond of his catch that he decided to buy it from the lake and put into his own fishery, which is about 25 miles away.

Despite smashing the world record, Tim said he would not submit the claim to the International Game Fish Association as they do not accept records from stocked waters.
