

《“学霸”被困电梯内5小时，依然淡定写作业》

导读:如果被困电梯，大多数人恐怕都会陷入惊慌之中，砸电梯门，大声呼救都是情急之下惊慌之举，然而初三学生孙轶潇却在电梯内淡定地写完了自己的作业！

A 14-year-old Chinese boy overcame two of humankind's most dreaded fears –getting stuck in an elevator and getting homework done, in a single night thanks to his quick-witted character.

Sun Yixiao was on his way up on Tuesday evening after school, when the lift suddenly lurched to a stop. A moment of panic followed, before the teenager decided to take matters into his own hands and find a way out.

Sun said he tried to pry open the elevator door, but dismissed the idea and instead leaned against the wall concerned there could be a malfunction that would send the elevator in a free fall.

??

He then pressed all the buttons in the hope to get the elevator to work again, but to no avail. Sun then punched the “stop” button, to lock the elevator and secure it won't move.

Without a cellphone at hand, Sun tried yelling to get the attention of people outside, but no one responded as time passed by.

??

But the young boy still had on last trick up his sleeve before surrendering.

????????????

He slipped a note through the door with the message “People stuck inside, please ask the property management for help,” and hoped someone would pick it up and act on it.

After exhausting all his options, the practical kid decided to tend to his academic responsibilities, not knowing how long it would take before someone finds him. He took out his textbooks and busied himself with his daily homework routine.

Soon after he finished his duties, Sun heard loud voices coming from outside.

“There was a large crowd outside, including my teachers and other parents, people looked quite agitated,” Sun said of the moment he was rescued.

"The guy must have weighted the pros and cons of the situation: he had a great chance to survive a stranded elevator, but would have been doomed if he left homework undone," joked @Zealshifang.
