

《网传兰州动物园虐待大熊猫，园方称或为竹尖刺伤所致》

导读:近日，微博网友曝光了一组兰州动物园大熊猫“蜀兰”疑似受伤的照片，引发大量网友的关注。

A zoo in Northwest China has denied mistreatment of the panda after photos of the wounded animal sparked public accusations of abuse.

??

Lanzhou Zoo explained that the panda Shulan had been treated by veterinarians after suffering a small cut from a piece of bamboo.

??

The health of Shulan raised concerns on Sina Weibo after uploaded images showed what appears to be bloodstained fur on her back.

??

Lei Qinghai, head of Lanzhou Zoo, said the discoloration on Shulan's fur is medicine applied to treat the wound.

????????????????????????????????

"The red spot looks large because the medicine spread around as the panda moved," Lei told Beijing Youth Daily. "From far away, people may get the impression that the wound is large." Shulan's cut has since healed, he added.

"????????????????????????????????"?????????????"????????????????"????????????????"

The State Forestry Administration announced on Weibo it will look into the case, and urged the zoo to better manage the panda's health.

????????????????????????????????

This is not the first time the Lanzhou Zoo has been accused of abusing pandas. In 2015, netizens raised concerns after photos surfaced of another panda, Lanzai, appearing "dirty" and "lethargic."

????????????????????2015?????????????????"?"?"?"????????????????

