A young man born with four legs has used social media to appeal for doctors to amputate his two extra limbs.

??????????????????????????????????

Arun Kumar, 22, was born with two extra legs growing from his lower back - one underdeveloped and the other permanently bent at the knee.

Arun, who lives in Uttar Pradesh, India, appealed through social media for medical help to remove his extra legs.

A team of specialists at Fortis Hospital in Delhi responded to Arun’s plea for help and organised a series of tests to find out how the legs are attached and if he can be treated.

Arun said: 'If I get an operation and doctors take off my two extra legs, then I can also live a normal life.

'I may be able to move and walk properly like others. If they are willing to do an operation, then I'm ready.'

Although he cannot move his extra legs, he does have feeling in them and carrying the weight on his back is damaging his posture and ability to walk.

Doctors at various hospitals deemed Arun's extra legs too risky to operate on when he was a baby.

????????????????????????????????????

But orthopaedic surgeon Dr Hermant Sharma, who examined Arun recently, has given him new hope.

Dr Sharma said: 'Since he has four legs we will be keen to know where is the blood supply coming from, and also we need to find out has he got extra kidneys, extra urethras, extra bladder?'
