"Double Eleven" has become the peak of online shopping in China. Sales on Tmall, e-commerce giant Alibaba's shopping platform, reached 91.2 billion RMB ($13.5 billion) last year on Nov. 11 alone. A total of 160 million items were sold on that day.

However, the online shopping craze has also exposed logistics deficiencies, leading to large-scale delivery delays last year. It is estimated that the number of items being delivered during the Double Eleven festival this year will reach 1.05 billion, increasing 35 percent from last year. This figure naturally requires stronger logistics.

An SRA employee stated that 47 high-speed trains would be running for same-day and next-day delivery during the shopping festival, covering seven routes and 18 cities. Another eight freight trains, including three running at speeds above 160km/h and five above 120km/h, will also be on standby.
