"We want to open up new markets, especially in agriculture, in China. We are also interested in scientific and technological development and we hope China will provide scholarship programs particularly in engineering and science. In addition, cultural exchanges and cooperation in archaeology and climate change also mean a lot to us."

He says he attaches great importance to the forthcoming second bilateral meeting with Xi Jinping to be held in his own country.

"I think the meeting with President Xi for the second time is quite critical, in particular when the international economic structure is changing and brimming with uncertainties. Apparently, that will be a topic high on my agenda for the APEC meeting."
