Passengers on the train said there had been a loud bang followed by a jolt that made some people on the train fall down.

The New York governor, Andrew Cuomo, said the train was travelling at a "fairly slow speed" when it failed to stop on time and struck a buffer at the station.

The impact was hard enough, however, to smash some of the train's windows and crease its doors.

Some of the injured were taken away on stretchers, while others were seen sitting near the train holding ice packs to their heads.
