Wei, which means "great", is the most popular first name among Chinese, with Zhang Wei, Wang Wei and Li Wei being ranked first, second and fourth respectively.

The analysis, by naming service company Qimingtong, is based on the names of 1.1 billion Chinese people, including 5 million babies born in 2015.

Names also reflect different eras, the report said. While Jianguo, which means "building the country", is common among the older generation, the names of today's newborn babies are more personal and poetic.

"The names show the parents' wishes and expectations for the children and, in a way, also tell the ethos of society," said Zhang Jing, founder of Qimingtong and chief editor of the report.
