By 2050, the world's economic output is expected to be twice as much as it is today, mainly boosted by technology. Six of the GDP top-ten seats will be given over to the so-called E7 Emerging Markets, namely China, Brazil, India, Indonesia, Mexico, Russia and turkey, with the total economy of the E7 nations making up half of the world's total.

Economic growth among the E7 counties will mainly be due to a sharp increase in population, resulting in greater consumption, and a rise in job numbers, according to the PwC analysis.
