“Mantis shrimp, lets’ go!” has become a new internet meme and catchphrase in 2017, originating from online gaming. The term is generally understood to signify a carefree and capricious attitude, since the real animal is known as a strong creature that is capable of smashing aquariums with its strong claws.

Many netizens ridiculed the ministry's response, saying that the name is funny and entirely appropriate.

“Mantis shrimps are creepy yet fearless animals, and they have hammer-like claws that can dig into your muscles. I think our new aircraft carrier should also possess such qualities, so that it can protect the country’s honor. Maybe the ministry can consider mantis shrimp as the ship’s nickname” one netizen wrote.

Others worried that the name was "too vulgar" to truly showcase China's power.

"In case you guys haven't noticed, mantis shrimp in Cantonese is 'pissing shrimp,' and that is not a good name for our first homegrown aircraft carrier," another netizen wrote on Sina Weibo.
