

《直播进校园侵犯学生隐私该不该禁止，你怎么看？》

导读:直播作为中国方兴未艾的一种经济现象拥有巨大的市场，但由于缺乏监管直播的内容越来越五花八门、渐渐侵犯了人们的底线，而最近直播进校园更是引起了许多人的反对。

Chinese livestreams have broadcast everything from dating to putting on makeup. Now the craze has entered schools and is raising concerns about privacy and child safety.

??

On Shuidi Zhibo, a livestreaming platform, more than 200 videos show students attending classes, taking exams or playing during breaks.

???????“????”????????????????????????????????200??

These videos were recorded on various campuses around the country ranging from kindergartens to senior high schools.

????????????????????????????????

"Someone is playing with a mobile phone," said one comment under a video with more than 34,000 viewers.

????????34000????????????"?????"

"The boy in the last row is napping," another comment followed.

????????"?????????"

One of the most watched videos was recorded at No. 1 Senior High School in the city of Yuzhou, central China's Henan Province. Principal Wen Mingjian told Xinhua that the school purchased webcams after requests from parents and teachers, to encourage better behavior and prevent bullying.

??

"Most of our students are left-behind children. Webcams allow their parents to see they are attending school," said Cheng Yafeng, a teacher.

????????????"??"

Shi Shuangyan, a migrant worker in Beijing, said he liked to watch his child in class thousands of miles away. However, he opposes livestreaming of the videos, suggesting that they should only be seen by teachers and parents.

??

Video surveillance is common in Chinese schools, but mainly for security and exam monitoring.

????????????????????????????????

In recent years, livestreaming has turned many ordinary people into overnight celebrities. China has more than 300 livestreaming platforms and more than 340 million people have watched live videos. With such a big market, can anything be broadcast online? The answer is obviously no.

????????????????????300????????????3.4????????????????????

Livestreaming in schools has raised concerns about students' mental health, privacy and safety.

????????????????????????

??????????1963????67%??????????

