

《女人迟到天经地义？你怎么看》

导读:英国著名育儿网站Mumsnet一篇帖子引起了网友激烈的争论，发帖人表示自己不能理解为什么迟到时朋友会非常恼火，一些人批评她的行为“无礼”、“恶心”，而另一些人则表示赞同，你怎么看？

We've all been on the receiving end of the text that says, 'sorry, five minutes late', but if you're regularly the one sending it you might be storing up a whole host of resentment from friends and family.

????????????????????"?????????"????????????????????????????????????

A woman has provoked an intense debate on Mumsnet after asking why certain friends seem to get annoyed with her when she turns up five or ten minutes after the time they'd agreed to meet.

Mumsnet??5?10????????????????

She said they get extra irritated if they arrive early, and then blame her for the entire 20-minute wait even if she's just a few minutes behind.

????????????????????????????????20??——??????????

But the poster was soon deluged with a barrage of harsh responses from people who described her as everything from 'rude' to 'entitled', with one even saying her behaviour is disgusting.

????????????????????????????????“?”?“?????”????????????“????”?

only a handful of people seemed to agree her habit of being late for a coffee or soft play date was not the end of the world, and suggested that people need to be more relaxed.

??

In the offending post, the user explained that she makes sure to be on time for professional appointments and time sensitive meetings like trips to the cinema.

??

But she's more relaxed when it comes to general social plans and doesn't see why the person can't just go straight into the coffee shop or restaurant and wait for her there if she doesn't arrive on the dot.

??

One responder said that her behaviour suggests her time is more important than her friends', and another called her a 'selfish, self-absorbed piece of work'.

??“????????”?

Many refused to accept that there's any excuse and insisted she should factor in time for hold ups, whether that be last-minute nappy changes if you have children or transport delays.

??