If Apple kicks major social networking apps out of its App Store, will you stop using iPhones or the apps themselves? Many netizens swore they would abandon iPhones, but not the apps. They are not willing to cut themselves off from the essential social networks. One netizen with the username "roro loves eating meat" said that both WeChat and iPhones can be viewed as tools. At present, no other apps can replace WeChat in daily life.

Another user, "Chenxuan Leo," pointed out that the iPhone market share is shrinking as China's domestic mobile phone makers expands. Sophisticated users may turn increasingly to the Android system in response to Apple's behavior.

Apple suspected of abusing market dominance

"Amitabha 007" speculated that the biggest reason for Apple's 30 percent in-app tipping service charge is that the company's revenue in China is shrinking, and its product shipments are also declining.

Meanwhile, "Adiba-V" claimed that Apple's behavior is an abuse of its market dominance. The current mobile phone payment market was developed by WeChat and Alipay. Apple wants to reap these same benefits after doing nothing to earn them, and to deploy this method against its competitors. Instead, Apple should offer users an improved Apple Pay service and a better customer experience.

Many felt that China's State Administration for Industry and Commerce should conduct an anti-monopoly probe into the case.
