导读:你见过会“自杀”的机器人吗？最近美国华盛顿一台保安机器人就把自己沉在喷泉中自杀了。

Alas, it seems we've got a few more years before the robots take over.

????????????????????

A security robot created by the company Knightscope was patrolling an office complex in Washington D.C. when it rolled into a fountain and met its untimely demise on Monday.

????? Knightscope??"??"??

The incident went viral on Twitter after Bilal Farooqui, an employee at the Washington Harbour complex, tweeted a photo of the 300-pound android, writing: 'We were promised flying cars, instead we got suicidal robots.'

The K5 robot, which measures about five-feet tall, is rented out to malls, office buildings, and parking lots to enforce order with a built-in video camera, license plate recognition, and thermal imaging.

Billed as an 'autonomous presence' that can 'guide [itself] through even the most complex environments', the robot spins around and whistles.

It appears the drudgery became too much on Monday when the robot rolled down some stairs and fell into the fountain.

Employees were pictured hauling the robot out of the water, and Knightscope said it would deliver a new robot to the office building for free.

After Farooqui posted a photo of the robot partially submerged, Twitter users went wild over the image.

Guillermo Meneses shared a previous photo of himself standing next to the robot, joking: 'My remembrance moment with Steve the Robot. Just last Friday. We were such good friends; he looked so happy and healthy'
