Security officials screened the boy at airport shortly after 10:30 a.m. Thursday, Metropolitan Airports Commission spokesman Patrick Hogan said. The boy then boarded Delta Flight 1651, which left for Las Vegas at 11:15 a.m.

The flight was not full, Hogan said, and the flight crew became suspicious mid-flight because the boy was not on their list of unattended minors. The crew contacted Las Vegas police, who met them upon landing and transferred the boy to child protection services, Hogan said.

Minneapolis Police went to his residence. Parents told officers they "hadn't seen much of him today."

"The child was screened along with all other passengers to ensure that he was not a threat to the aircraft," said the TSA spokesperson.

??

They added that video of the boy at the checkpoint has been reviewed, and they are "investigating whether we should reconfigure barriers to prevent another incident like this one."

??

Video also shows the boy at the airport Wednesday, Hogan said. He grabbed a bag from the carousel and ordered lunch at a restaurant outside of the security checkpoints, Hogan said. He ate and then told the server he had to use the bathroom, left the bag and never returned to pay.

??

The owner of the bag was identified, and the bag was returned to him, Hogan said. Nothing was stolen.

??

The boy became "violent" and was hospitalized in Las Vegas, where hospital staff reported he was "uncontrollable" at first but eventually calmed down, it said.

??

A hearing in Las Vegas about the boy's case was scheduled for Tuesday.
