The bar chart shows the percentage of career choices made by boys and girls. The data reveals significant differences in their preferences.

Among boys, engineering is the most popular choice, accounting for 28%, followed closely by computer science at 25%. Teaching is the least favored option, representing only 7% of their choices.

In contrast, girls show a different trend. Teaching is their top preference, with 30% selecting this career path. Nursing comes next at 25%, while engineering is the least preferred, chosen by only 8% of girls.

In conclusion, the bar chart highlights the divergent career preferences of boys and girls. By challenging traditional gender roles and fostering inclusivity, we can create a society that embraces a wide range of career choices for all individuals.
