It is widely acknowledged that environmental protection is crucial for the sustainable development of our planet. However, there is little agreement on how to address environmental issues effectively. From my perspective, I firmly believe that individuals, governments, and businesses should all take responsibility for environmental protection.

Firstly, individuals can contribute by adopting eco-friendly habits such as reducing waste, conserving energy, and using public transportation. Additionally, governments can implement policies that promote renewable energy and protect natural resources. Furthermore, businesses can adopt sustainable practices and invest in green technologies.

Despite these benefits, some may argue that individual actions have limited impact and that only governments and businesses can make a significant difference. However, I believe that collective efforts can create a ripple effect and lead to significant change.

In conclusion, environmental protection is a shared responsibility. Therefore, we should all take action and work together to reduce our environmental footprint. In this way, we can create a healthier and more sustainable future for ourselves and future generations.
