

An aerial photograph of a heart-shaped island, densely covered in green vegetation. A long, straight, light-colored strip, likely a runway or airstrip, runs diagonally across the island. The island is surrounded by clear, turquoise water, with a small, rocky islet visible in the upper left corner.

"It is certain that we will soon have a wedding on the island," he said. He added that interest in his island had increased since reports emerged claiming that Angelina Jolie was linked to the purchase of another $12.2million heart-shaped island in the U.S.

"But since reports about the apparent interest of Angelina Jolie in the 11-acre American island of Petra, we have realised thanks to all the phone calls we have been getting that there is a lot of potential for our island to be used as a wedding destination."

The problem is that despite the romantic appearance from the air, in reality the island is covered in rocks and surrounded by a rocky beach - making access difficult for the average bride in a wedding dress and very difficult for wedding photographs.

Now following the massive interest, Mr Juresko has managed to get funding to develop the island and the bulldozers have moved in to level broad strips on the surface to make way for a grove of olive trees, to be planted and to improve the jetty to allow wedding parties to land.
