《grade obsession 分数控》

From elementary school through high school, students are faced with a tremendous amount of pressure to get good grades, so much so that their mental well-being is at risk.

Research has shown that there is a clear correlation between grades and suicide risk. 16-year-old students with the lowest grades are three times more likely to commit suicide than those at the top of the class. Something needs to change. All too many adults seem to be oblivious to the issue of mental health in schools, especially in regard to grade obsession.
