Zhang Zhenlong, who was controlled and forced to work on a fishing boat for more than three years, jumped into the sea and swam for more than six hours to the seashore, finally being saved and enjoying his freedom, reported yangtse.com on Tuesday.

In October 2010, Zhang fell into the sea accidentally and was saved by some fishermen in a passing fishing boat. In return, the fishermen asked him to work for them on the sea for three years. They forced him to work and locked him in a cabin every time the boat pulled into the shore. They cut off all his contact to the outside world.

The police have been investigating the case for illegal restriction of personal liberty.
