An abandoned, century-old, supposedly haunted mansion in downtown Beijing known for its legendary ghost tales has become a popular place for adventurers after the thriller movie based on it, The House That Never Dies, was released, the Beijing News reported on Tuesday.

The mansion is located at the No 81 at Chaoyangmennei Street in Dongcheng District. The two ancient buildings inside the mansion used to house a training school for the US Catholics in the early 20th century. It has been dubbed the scariest mansion in Beijing by adventurers due to its dilapidated condition and online rumors about ghosts there.

The administrators of the mansion said that the wooden-structure building is unsafe for visitors and hope that tourists will take a rational perspective on it.
