

《柴静雾霾调查《穹顶之下》 引中外媒体热议》

A documentary about China's pollution problem has become a viral hit in the country over the weekend racking up over 100 million views in less than 24 hours.

????????????????????????????24????????????????????1??

'China's Haze: Under the Doom', a 143 minute presentation by former CCTV reporter Chai Jing lays the blame on a lack of government oversight as a major reason behind the country's deteriorating air quality problem.

????????????????????????????????143????????????????????????????????

Showing a series of photographs and slides, Chai examines how the pollution problem has become so serious in the country and reveals the project was inspired by lung illness of her new-born daughter.

??

The TED Talk-style presentation was self-funded by the former TV anchor and was released by video site Youku and the People's Daily Online.

????????????????TED????????????????????

The newly-appointed head of China's environment ministry, Chen Jining, has praised Chai Jing and her documentary saying it has "aroused the public's environmental awareness from the public health point of view, and is worthy of admiration."

[illegible]

The minister is reported to have contacted Chai Jing to personally thank her.

????????????????????????????????

It comes just days before the 2015 National People's Congress convenes in Beijing and is expected to provoke debate on environmental policy.

????????2015????????????????????????????????

