A 22-year-old man surnamed Xu is behind the explosion that killed at least eight people outside the entrance gate of a kindergarten in Fengxian County, east China's Jiangsu Province, police said on Friday.

The explosion took place at around 16:48 local time (0848 GMT). on Thursday afternoon.

Sixty-five people were injured and hospitalized. Of the eight people in critical condition, four are now out of danger.

The suspect, who was also killed in the blast, has assembled an explosive device and detonated it outside the nursery when parents were to pick their children up.

Media reports said that the man was going through a rough patch, as he had been suspended from school and suffered from a neurological disease known as vegetative dystonia, which is characterized by a disorder of functions and senses of the body without any underlying organic cause.

Explosive materials were found in Xu's rented home, which was close to the kindergarten, and the walls were covered with such words as "death," "deceased," and "extinction".
