China and Russia are set to hold a joint naval drill that will feature their top vessels and some of their militaries ' most advanced equipment. Analysts say this reflects the growing partnership between the two countries.

"All the advanced equipment will be put to use in the future. We not only want to put these weapons to use, we also hope Russia will become familiar with them. Both sides will use their best equipment in the joint drill, which indicates that our trust in each other is continuing to increase," Cao Weidong, researcher with PLA Navy's Academic Research Inst., said.
