???Innovations in the world of office furniture design have tended to serve one of two purposes. Some are designed to help the corporations who pay for them — open-plan offices are supposed to make workers more collaborative, for example, and cubicles or “hotel” desks help save on real estate costs. Then others are designed to help improve workers’ health — like ergonomically designed office seating, balance ball chairs and the current obsession withstanding desks.

???Think how many screens you've used in the last 48 hours. The domestic TV in your home or hotel. The big public TV screens now common in airports and train stations. The PC on your office desk. The laptop in your briefcase. The PDA that keeps your diary while you're on the move. Your mobile phone. And so on.
