He told the Mail Online: "It was impossible to walk, I could barely get on the plane. I wanted to take them all off as soon as I got to my seat - beside which was a spare seat that I could have sat one of my bags on - but was told I had to wait until we were up in the air."

After getting to his seat, James, who had been travelling back to Glasgow with other members of the band, began undressing but found his body temperature had sky-rocketed, leaving him feeling unwell.

The teenager had squeezed himself into the entire contents of his rucksack, which contained four jumpers, six t-shirts, three pairs of jeans, two jogging bottoms, two jackets and even two hats, rather than ditch them.
