

《走的英文怎么写》

??walk/go????????????????????You must be hungry after all that walking.????????????????They came at six and went at nine.

????????????????

I like walking on the wet sand when the tide is out.

????????????????

She walked along rehearsing her excuse for being late.

????????????????

I'd rather do the journey in one go, and not stop on the way.

????????????????

If you go now you should miss the crowds.

????????????????

You must be hungry after all that walking.

??????????????

Even a short walk exhausted her.

????—??????????

It's not fair—I never get to go first.

??????????????

Okay, so are we agreed on going north?

??????????????

Water in the engine compartment is sucked away by a hose.

??????????????

We walked down some stone steps to the beach.

??????????????

Richard stood up and walked across to the window.

??????????????

By day a woman could safely walk the streets.

??????????????

Could this really stop the champagne from going flat?

??????????????

He rose from his chair and walked to the window.

????????????????

It takes three hours, whichever route you take.

????????????????

I can't go; I owe it to him to stay.

????????????????

They walked out in protest after being outvoted.

????????????????

They came at six and went at nine.

????????????—????

Anyway, I'd better go now—I'll see you tomorrow.

????????????????

I would have walked out, I was that angry.

????????????????

Some people think it is unlucky to walk under a ladder.

????????????????

I walked out and closed the door behind me.

????????????????

Why don't you look where you're going?

???????—??????

The time's getting on—we ought to be going.

??????????????

We ought to go; it's getting late.

??????????????

When Steinberg had gathered up his papers, he went out.

??????????????

She stopped for a moment, then walked on.

??????????????

It really was a mercy that he'd gone so rapidly at the end.

??????????????

You go on ahead—I'll catch you up in a few minutes.

??????????????

He went off with his best friend's wife.