1. Slow Down Your Speaking Speed

1.?????????

You might be an eloquent speaker when it comes to your mother tongue, but expecting the same standards from yourself when speaking in a foreign language may not be very realistic.

??

Especially, if you're at the early stages of learning. Learners are often told not to worry about the mistakes they're making, however, it is easy to understand why you would like to make a good impression on your audience. To overcome this difficulty, you may try slowing down your speaking speed.

??

Nobody will hold it against you if you speak more slowly and clearly. Great speakers do the same to get their message across. Selecting your words carefully may also be seen as a sign of respect towards your audience. It shows that you want to give them the best possible answer.

There might come a time when you can use one particular sentence with little, or no alteration at all. Unfortunately, many people learn words by heart, but have no idea how to use them in a sentence.

When speaking in a foreign language, you might be so focused on what you are saying ? that you forget to listen to what others are saying.

also give you time to relax a little.

Writing is one way of producing language; it may help you get used to and reflect on the ways English is used, which might prove to be useful when speaking.

Speaking, on the other hand, is a much more spontaneous process. Find people you can practice with. I have a feeling that it will be a great experience.
