《金价创新高 但金市未必强劲（双语）》

Poor Matt. My MarketBeat cohort hasn't liked gold for a long, long time, but it keeps on jumping. Old Yeller clipped a fresh record today, settling at $1439.90/oz on Comex.

??????Matt Phillips????????????????????????????????????????????????????????Comex??????????????1439.90???

Matt's view of the barbarous relic has shown up in several posts. Back in January, he highlighted how Warren Buffett's pal Charlie Munger basically hates dark-hearted goldbugs.

Everett??(Matt)??????????????????????????????1??????????????????Charlie Munger???????????????

In November, he brought us a raft of analysts who thought gold's rally had gotten overdone. Earlier that month, he confessed that Old Yeller kept defying his bearish view.

??11????????????????????????????????????????????????????????????????

Last September he pointed out that gold-vending machines (not to mention numerous gold advertisements on television and billboards) surely meant gold was topping out.

??9????????????????????????????????????????????

Now, Old Yeller may be at a fresh record, but Matt may be more right than it may seem.
??????????????????????????????

Since September 27, gold has risen to $1439.90 from $1296.70, a gain of about 11%. The S&P 500, meantime, has done even better over the same period, rising 16%.

???9?27??????????1296.70???????1439.90???????11%??????500????????????????16%?

Old Yeller may be higher, but it's underperformed the stock market over the past several months. That might surprise giddy goldbugs on a new record day.

????????????????????????????????????????????????????????????????